Note on your letter 1/19/73, on your difficulty remembering where you've filed something when there is a multiple choice. Same here. At first I used to decide on the basis of where I would look first if I were hunting for a particular clipping. No good, especially with the very fine line that sometimes divides some multiple choices. I found that when I really had trouble deciding I really had trouble finding, so now - in self-defense and simple desperation - I just decide where the thing should go and put a note in the other folders saying where it's filed, with source, date, title. A nuisance at first but almost routine now and worth the few moments it takes - saves time and cuts down on temper.

Does your Hermes walk away from you and do you have to keep pulling it back? I have a simple solution.
